

Bernice Romero
Save the Children

Bernice Romero is currently the Senior Director of Humanitarian Response Public Policy and Advocacy at Save the Children, responsible for leading Save the Children's policy and advocacy around humanitarian crises and emergency response. She is also the co-chair of Save the Children International's Humanitarian Advocacy Working Group. Ms. Romero came to Save the Children after several years as the Advocacy and Campaigns Director for Oxfam International, where she oversaw Oxfam's international campaigns on humanitarian crises, trade, aid, climate change, agriculture, health and education. She also oversaw Oxfam's international advocacy offices in Washington, Geneva, Brussels and New York, targeting the World Bank, International Monetary Fund, United Nations, European Union and World Trade Organization. Prior to that, Ms. Romero was the Advocacy and Policy Deputy Director at Oxfam America. Ms. Romero earned her Masters' degree in Latin American studies from Stanford University, and her Bachelors' degree Magna Cum Laude in Hispanic Studies from Harvard College. Before coming to Washington she worked as an aide to Nobel laureate President Oscar Arias of Costa Rica and worked with him to establish the Centre for Peace and Reconciliation at the Arias Foundation in Costa Rica. Ms. Romero also worked at the Latin America Program of the Woodrow Wilson Center where she focused on ethnic conflict, democratization and gender studies.